There were two things I cared most about growing up—sports and reading. Eventually, reading led to writing. Reaching the limits of my athletic ability in college helped with that transition, as covering sports gave me a way to stay connected to the games I used to play.

Opening spread of my feature story tracking down the origins of Nebraska's Blackshirts logo for Hail Varsity magazine.

Over nearly 20 years as a sportswriter, I've been fortunate to write for The Guardian, Fox Sports and CBS Sports. I also helped start and run what I believe was one of the best regional sports magazines around. Thank you for taking a look at my work.

I was able to bring a passion project of mine to life in June of 2023, packaging a special kids supplement as a gift for subscribers with our annual football yearbook. My memory of reading SI for Kids growing up served as the inspiration.

We only had 28 pages available, and a smaller format, but we packed those pages with a mix of games, a how-to-punt tutorial, quick Q&As with Nebraska athletes and a feature on Chief Borders, one of the most-followed Huskers on TikTok.

Nebraska men's basketball was beaten in the first round of the Big Ten Tournament on March 11. It would be one of the last sporting events in the country as Covid shutdowns rolled in the next day. Our March issue was going to print in three days.

We reworked 60% of the magazine over those three days, doing our best to report what we knew about a very uncertain time.

The strange circumstances resulted in a cover I'm still proud of today. I came up with the concept, and the design team did an excellent job executing it.

Spread from the March 2020 issue

"WORST DAY OF OUR LIVES." — SOPHOMORE INFELDER SPENCER SCHWELLENBACH

"MY HEART BREAKS FOR EVERY SINGLE ONE OF MY TEAMMATES. THIS TEAM WAS SPECIAL." — JUNIOR WRESTLER CADE SYROBODA

"MY HEART HURTS. TO THE SPORT THAT HAS GIVEN ME EVERYTHING AND THEN SOME. I CANNOT THANK YOU ENOUGH. I WISH THE SENIORS COULD HAVE SEEN OUR CHILDHOOD DREAMS THROUGH, BUT AM GRATEFUL FOR THE OPPORTUNITY TO COMPETE AT SUCH A HIGH STAGE. FOREVER THE BEST MEMORIES WITH THE BEST PEOPLE." — SENIOR OLYMPIAST SIERRA HASSEL

A SUDDEN END

Shane Smothers woke up on Saturday, March 14, at his home in Alabama surprised to see a familiar SUV in the driveway. His son, Nebraska true freshman quarterback Logan Smothers, had made the 12-hour drive from Lincoln, stopping in Kansas to drop off true freshman offensive lineman Turner Corcoran. • That's how it was for Husker athletes in the days following a wave of cancellations and postponements related to the COVID-19 pandemic. What was one day was totally different the next, and their reactions on social media ranged from shock to sadness to, in at least one case, very specific logistics. Seasons ended on the brink of championships for some. Others just needed to get home.

"EVERY POPULATION I THINK OF IS IN NEED OF PRAYERS WITHOUT CEASING: MEDICAL PROFESSIONALS, LEADERS AND DECISION-MAKERS, PEOPLE THAT ARE ILL, WORKERS THAT HAVE LOST WAGES, STUDENT ATHLETES, SIMPLY EVERYONE." — SOFTBALL HEAD COACH RHONDA REVELLE

"THIS WASN'T SUPPOSED TO BE THE WAY IT ENDS." — JUNIOR BOWLER LEAH GLAZIER

"THANK YOU, HUSKER NATION, FOR MAKING EVERY GAME FEEL LIKE A HOME GAME AND SUPPORTING US THE WHOLE WAY. SEE YOU NEXT YEAR!" — SOPHOMORE INFELDER CAM CHICK

"WHO HAS A PICKUP TRUCK AND IS WILLING TO MOVE SOME STUFF TO ATLANTA TOMORROW FOR ME?" — JUNIOR LINEBACKER DALEB TRINOR

"AT THE FIRST HINT OF CATASTROPHE, SPORT BECAME IRRELEVANT. ALWAYS MAKE SURE YOU'RE MORE THAN JUST AN ATHLETE."

— SENIOR MIDDLE-DISTANCE RUNNER GEORGE KUSCHE

HUSKER SEASONS END STEPS AWAY FROM NCAA CHAMPIONSHIPS

Nebraska wrestling was near the end of its best season since joining the Big Ten. The Huskers finished second at the Big Ten Championships in Piscataway, New Jersey. Tim Huskers qualified for the NCAA Wrestling Championships scheduled for March 19-21 in Minneapolis. No. 1 seed Eric Schultz (197 pounds), No. 5 Isaiah White (165), No. 6 Chad Red Jr. (141), No. 7 Taylor Venz (184), No. 9 Collin Parinton (149), No. 10 Mikey Labriola (174), No. 13 Peyton Robb (137), No. 14 Ridge Lovett (133), No. 21 David Jensen (285) and No. 29 Alex Thomsen (125).

Merely listing their names here is of no consolation. Unfortunately, it's all there is in a time unlike anything many of us have ever experienced.

begin on March 13, one day after the Big Ten made the decision to cancel all spring and winter sports. The Huskers were sending four athletes to Albuquerque, New Mexico, to compete: Alecscar Pereira (weight throw), Berger Lambrecht Jr. (shot put), George Kusche (mile, 3,000 meters) and Kristina Inigo (shot put). It would have been the first appearance at the Championships for all four athletes.

Four Huskers had earned spots at the NCAA Swimming and Diving Championships, scheduled for March 18-21 in Athens, Georgia. Swimmers Autumn Haebig, Madison Coughlin, Andre Coffey and diver Sara Troyer were to be Nebraska's largest contingent at the Championships since 1999-2000.

Nebraska softball was about 42% done with its regular-season schedule when the Big Ten announced all remaining spring and winter sports were canceled. Husker baseball had played just 28% of its schedule. This was the new reality for thousands of college athletes in spring sports throughout the country in March.

"As a former college football player and a parent of college student-athletes," Nebraska Athletic Director Bill Moss said, "I have great empathy for our young men and women who had their seasons cut short, particularly our seniors."

On the other end of spectrum were the winter sports cut short on the brink of championships, those seasons that were 90% finished. The NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships were scheduled to Husker fans received everything they wanted for Christmas in 2017 with the hiring of native son Scott Frost. Our issue that month reflected the warm feelings among the fan base.

I worked with the design team on the cover. We actually bought a WWE wrestling figure, repainted him so he was Frost-ified, then put him under an actual tree for the photo.

The issue would turn out to be more popular than Frost's 16-31 tenure at his alma mater. I assigned and edited the main feature in this issue, a close look at the small town where the Frost legend began.

CARVED IN WOOD RIVER

STORY BY DEREK PETERSON • PHOTOS BY JAMES WOOLDRIDGE

On Fridays and Saturdays, Scott Frost and his closest friends on his Wood River (Neb.) High School varsity football team would meet up in the basement of his house and play cards. In a town as small as Wood River, with fewer than 1,500 people, there's not a lot to do anyway, but Frost and friends wanted to stay out of trouble. So, as often as possible, everyone would round up all the dimes and quarters they could find, jam them into a piece of Tupperware and head over to the Frosts' for poker.

"Best memories I ever had was sitting around his house at night playing poker," Mark Codner, one of Frost's high school buddies and his go-to tight end, said. "We'd sit there and play poker for three or four hours every night."

No one ever ran the table. One night Codner would leave with $10 in earnings. The next night, Frost would leave the big winner and someone else the night after that. It all just kind of passed around. The boys didn't really play for money though - even though it was nice for a bunch of high school kids - as much as being around each other and having a good time.

In the 20 years since those nights spent around a fold-up table, Frost has won a national championship at Nebraska, played in the NFL, been a finalist for the Broyles Award as the top assistant coach in the country, become a head coach, led an undefeated season, been the national coach of the year and returned home to the place where he began his journey.

No one really knew what Frost was going to do until he signed a seven-year, $15-million contract with Nebraska on Nov. 27. Or maybe some did. "He has a good poker face," Codner said. "He really does."

Not much has changed from his Wood River days.

- FEATURE: The origin of Nebraska's tradition of handing out black jerseys to the starting defense is well-known, but when I started asking university sources about where the Blackshirts logo came from, nobody knew. It took me about two years to track down the Omaha screenprinter-turned-psychologist who created the logo that has become a key part of Nebraska football's visual identity. [FULL STORY]
